The family had asked if the unfinished tattoo design for the deceased (shown in the photo) could be engraved on a monument. When I suggested we could create a one of a kind memorial utilizing the concept of an hourglass monument, the family was receptive and excited at the prospect. Excluding the flower arrangement, the hourglass was replicated and the wording "In God's Time" was used on the new memorial. The additional blasting on the outline of the hourglass globes adds detail and interest from what would have been an all polished memorial, yet remains in character with the thick outline of the globes on the tattoo. On closer inspection, you will notice a hint of soft 220 grit sand blasting, showing the sand of the hour glass flowing from globe to globe. Space was left available on the bottom globe for another family member.
